Mobile Quest Summer Camp

Make games this summer with the smartest phones around!

"Are you crazy about games and gadgets and curious about how they work? Are you creative and enthusiastic and ready to work and play hard this summer? Then Mobile Quest is for you!"

Mobile Quest is a week-long game design camp that runs July 26-30, 2010, on the campus of Parsons the New School for Design. Students entering the 6th grade in September 2010 will have the chance to work with professional game designers, creative artists and other experts to learn how to turn great ideas into great games. Mobile Quest introduces campers to basic game design ideas and stresses the importance of teamwork, critical thinking, digital media literacy, and problem solving. Mobile Questers will draw board games, explore the city, tell stories with pictures and videos, and incorporate all of these materials into their games.

During Mobile Quest, participants will use smart phones, which are phones that know a lot—they take pictures, record video, and use GPS to locate us on maps. The phones offer a toolkit for kids to make games about the city and learn about how smart phones work, how they manage information, and influence the ways we interact with and explore the world all around us.

If you'd like to work and play hard this summer, you'll love Mobile Quest. No technology or game design experience is needed—just curiosity, creativity and excitement to learn new things with a special Mobile Quest twist!
